

Consumers With High-Risk or Non-Residential Addresses on Experian Credit Reports

Could Be Affected by a Class Action Settlement

An expanded Settlement has been reached in a class action lawsuit that claims that Experian reported inaccurate information about some consumers' addresses through its Fraud Shield product. Experian denies it did anything wrong.

Are you included?

You are included if, between September 27, 2017 and the present, Experian sent your consumer report to a third party with an inaccurate Fraud Shield Indicator showing your address was either a high-risk or non-residential address. This may have impacted your ability to obtain credit.

What does the Expanded Settlement provide?

There is no money available, but Experian will change its business practices in how it discloses and handles disputes about certain Fraud Shield Indicators. Experian also agreed to pay for notice and administration costs. A separate settlement provides money for consumers who were harmed by how Experian reported certain Fraud Shield Indicators.

What are my rights?

If the Court approves this Settlement, you will be bound by the Court's decision. You will give up certain rights to sue Experian, including for the type of class-action claims made in this lawsuit, related to Experian's reporting of your address as a high-risk or non-residential address. You will keep your right to file an individual lawsuit for claims that arose before the Settlement became effective. You may object to the Settlement by January 30, 2023. The Court will hold a hearing on March 1, 2023, to consider whether to approve the Settlement. You or your lawyer may appear and speak at the hearing at your own expense.
